FROM WASHINGTON.

The President and the Tariff.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 10.

The President is extremely anxious, and will use every means in his power to accomplish a modification of the present tariff, the raising of the four new regiments, and the increase of the navy; and these will be among the first measures to which the attention of both branches of the Legislature will be called during the present session.

Senator HAMLIN's room was entered last night, while he was sleeping, and money and other articles belonging to him stolen.

The redemption of the Public Debt, last week, amounted to $42,300.

WORK FOR THE PRESENT SESSION.

The President's Message and the Greytown Affair.

Our Legation at London.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 7, 1854.

Among the measures laid over from last Session, with the confident anticipation by many of the friends that it would pass during the present, is the French Spoliation Bill, in which a very large number claimants, especially in Massachusetts, are deeply interested. It is not pleasant to disseminate evil tidings; but I am compelled to assure those claimants that they will not do well to anticipate the much wished success of this measure. At no time during the last three years could it have been passed without a most heroic effort; and the general overthrow of its special advocates in the House—the Massachusetts members—at the recent election, has lessened even the chance it had a year ago,—for the influence of a dead man in Congress amounts to comparatively little. If, however, the claimants design making an effort, in the face of these accumulating difficulties, the sooner they get at work the better. They will need all their time, and all the power they can bring to bear, to secure the slightest chance of success, notwithstanding the failure of Congress to adjust their claims in one of the faulest disgraces upon the pages of American history.

The President in his Message intimates very distinctly that the power which bombarded Copenhagen is the one which has characterized our behavior of Greytown with "more of boisterous show of justice." The Executive did not see fit to give us any more particular information in relation to the attitude assumed by Great Britain with reference to the Greytown affair; and yet it is well known to be a subject of correspondence between the two Governments. Lord CLARENDON stated to an American gentleman about three weeks ago, that his Government had been much pained by the receipt of a letter from Mr. MARCY in relation to this subject, the tone and spirit of which seemed incompatible with that friendliness and good neighborhood which ought to characterize the intercourse of Great Britain and the United States.

This letter, I understand, was a refusal to entertain the claims presented by British subjects for indemnity for loss of property by the Greytown bombardment, Mr. MARCY asserting that the residents of Greytown were pirates and outlaws, and not subjects, therefore, of governmental interference and protection, nor yet of indemnification for their losses. But Lord CLARENDON could not understand Mr. MARCY's argument. "Surely," he said, "the American Government does not send its officers to demand apologies of pirates, as it did of the president Greytown, before it was bombarded!" This showed argument against the Administration explanation of that unfortunate transaction will be a difficult one to get over, it strikes me.

For one, I have been long awaiting, with considerable interest, the promised unanswerable defense of this "charge of Greytown," really hoping, for the credit of the country, that there were new facts to be developed which would relieve the Nation of some of the odium it has entailed. There far we have nothing but the ingenious and labored apology offered in the message—a recount of facts with which we were already familiar—as a sort of platform from which to jump at a conclusion that begs the entire question at issue. It must strike every candid mind, I think, that the Administration is very desirous of its own position when it confesses the necessity of such labored explanation. Surely it would be better to acknowledge the fallibility of human judgment, confess therein of Greytown, and so close the chapter with a page of penitence that would atone somewhat for its disgrace.

I do not remember to have seen it stated, publicly, that Admiral FAIRSHAWE, of the British Navy, has been ordered to the command of the West India squadron with an increased force. The object of this movement is to check our impetuosity in Central America, if there should seem to be occasion for it. It is at least doubtful whether this act of the British Government will be apt to mend our manners or our temper. On the contrary, unless great prudence and mutual forbearance are exercised by the British and American forces in that quarter, a disastrous collision may occur at any moment. Great Britain should remember always, that however much the people of the United States may sympathize the victory of Greytown, they will not permit British interference in the affairs of Central America, and especially will not yield to British interference in political concern there, either directly or indirectly.

The speech of Hon. PRESTON KING was unheard in the House to-day, and the usual heaven-sent quiet in the country. I count your Congressional reporters have communicated the eulogy delivered by Hon. M. S. LAWHEAD, of California, which he modestly mentions of as a perfect gem by his colleague in Congress. The adjectives scatter from his lips, studded with exquisite beauty and refined in the fire of enthusiasm, so impressive in his delivery, and so natural every intonation. It was listened to to-day, as always, with profound attention.

In the Senate, in violation of a positive rule, the death was also announced, and the Senate adjourned. The rule I refer to is one moved by Hon. HENRY CLAY during his last term in the Senate, and provides that when a member of Congress dies during a recess, and away from Washington, no notice of the occurrence shall be taken by the Senate. The rule has always been kept in the Senate heretofore. Some time since, I remember, the death of two Massachusetts members was passed over in the Senate without notice, and the death even of a Senator, Mr. WHITCOMB, of Indiana, has never, to this day, been officially mentioned in the body of which he was a member at the time of his decease. This is all wrong. The rule should be kept or be abrogated. It is not decent, especially that such a rule as this should be enforced at one time, and nullified at others, because such a course places upon the record a seeming disrespect for those whose decease is not made the subject of eulogistic ceremony.

M. CUENA, the Spanish Minister, I am happy to inform you, is rapidly recovering from the injuries sustained by being thrown from his carriage, and may soon be expected about again. His escape from death has been very narrow. Mr. MOLINA, the Minister from Costa Rica, is failing fast from consumption, which will probably add him to its countless victims ere many days. He is at present at the head of the diplomatic corps, and is widely esteemed as an amiable and most courteous gentleman.

Our Legation at London has been known of late as "SICKLES, SANDERS & Co." There is more of spinnes in the title of the firm than I had supposed, as will be seen by the following list of the Legation, published by its members, a copy of which has come into my hands.

UNITED STATES LEGATION.

Minister—Hon. JAMES BUCHANAN, No. 10 Harley-street, Cavendish-square.

Secretary of Legation—DANIEL E. SICKLES, Esq.

Attaches—Colonel T. B. LAWRENCE, WM. H. WELSH, Esq., No. 16 Harley-street, Cavendish-square.

General—GEORGE N. SANDERS, Esq., No. 45 Weymouth-street, Portland-place.

Government Dispatch Agent—Mr. JOHN MILLER, No. 26 Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

To sum up, you see we have here one "Honorable," one "Colonel," three "Esquires," and one plain "Mr."—quite a variety. The designation assigned the dispatch agent is probably intended to indicate that he is not a sovereign, but only an Englishman—such distinctions being essential to establish the Democracy of the majority of the firm, who don't like to rely upon their inability to stand the FRANKIN dinners for evidence of their purity. But how, pray, became the General a member of the Legation? And what diplomatic functions or privileges has the Dispatch Agent? Mr. BUCHANAN's name is placed at the head of the list, you perceive, which seems to show that the firm have not altogether forgotten what is due to years and diplomatic etiquette—an great merit in them sicker, when it is remembered that they can make the Minister really useful, at times, when they find any hard knots in the way of their diplomacy. What a nice time "Young America" must be having at London!

Postmaster-General CAMPBELL, ever ready to accommodate the Press, has recently made an arrangement by which Southern correspondents from this city may mail their letters to the great cities on the Southern route up to the moment when the mail leaves the office—which is an hour after the closing of the regular mail. The Dead Body of a Human Being discovered in a Box at the Railroad Station at Amsterdam—Supposed to be that of Miss Moore, of Rochester.

UTICA, Saturday, Dec. 9.

A few days since, a passenger on one of the night trains of the Central Railroad left a box in charge of the porter at the station at Amsterdam, stating that he would return for it in a day or two, and then continued on his way to the eastward. Not coming back, however, at the appointed time, the box was opened, and it was found to contain the remains of a human being. The body having been partly dissected, could not be recognized. The Coroner held an inquest upon it, and, as nothing of importance concerning it could be elicited, it was interred.

As the singular disappearance of Miss MOORE, of Rochester, has not yet been unexcavated for, this fact has led to the impression there that these are the remains of that young lady.

Large Fire in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Saturday, Dec. 9.

A fire broke out in this city at 9 o'clock this evening, on the north side of Baltimore-street, between Eutaw and Paca-streets, in Jonas McGowan's tinware warehouse. The flames soon spread from there to six adjoining buildings, each four stories high, occupied by the following named persons: NEWBRIAN & Co., iron railing establishments; MILLS & MURRAY, floor and food depôt; E. WILLS & BROTHERS, tin and stove warehouse; JOHN REYNOLDS, tinner; E. P. OUSLER, painter and by KNABE, GARLUS & Co., for one of their piano warehouses. The buildings were all destroyed, with their entire contents, leaving nothing but the walls, a crumbled up mass of ruins. M. E. CLARK & BROTHERS' four warehouses was on fire at one time, but escaped destruction. It was the only building in the row saved. The Eutaw House was in great danger of being destroyed in the course of the evening, and in preparation is owing to the firemen having devoted nearly their whole attention to save it and the surrounding buildings.

Great Pigeon Shooting Match at Petersburg, New-Jersey.

PATERSON, Saturday, Dec. 9.

The great pigeon shooting match, which had been so long talked of, and so extensively discussed in sporting circles, for the past month, commenced here at 9 o'clock this afternoon. The Paterson Cricket Club ground, back of the Passaic Falls, was the place selected by the contestants for the shooting to take place, and about three hundred persons were present to witness the trial. The match was between Mr. PILKINGTON, of this place, and Mr. HAMPSON, of Yonkers, N. Y., for fifty dollars a side, each having twenty-one birds to shoot at, at sixty yards boundary. Mr. PILKINGTON gave Mr. HAMPSON five dollars to shoot here. The following is the result:

PILKINGTON killed 15 out of 17 birds.

HAMPSON killed 10 out of 17 birds.

Mr. HAMPSON hit his last bird, but it fell about ninety yards from the trap, and being thirty yards outside the boundary, of course it was not counted. After shooting at his seventeenth bird, Mr. HAMPSON gave up the contest, and the stakeholder passed the funds over to Mr. PILKINGTON.

The betting on the ground, as the match progressed, was from three to one to twenty-five to one on Mr. PILKINGTON.

CITY POLITICS.

Address of the Chairman of the Young Men's Whig General Committee.

The final meeting of the Young Men's Whig General Committee for 1854, was held last Tuesday evening at the Broadway House. The Chairman, Justice JAMES H. WELSH, took leave of the Committee, and addressed them as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: As the political year that marks the existence of this Committee draws so nearly to a close, that no contingency seems probable under which you may be called upon to reassemble, I take this opportunity to speak to you of matters suggested by the circumstances of my position through your favor. That position was attained through your own free act, with no other pledge, bargain, or compromise than such as could be implied from a mutual understanding that the union of all sections of the Whig party should form the basis of our political action. It was in pursuance of this understanding that your Chairman, in the discharge of a duty imposed by the rules of the Committee, endeavored so to form the Sub-Committees as to fairly embody in them the various Whig influences represented in this General Committee—looking not beyond the Committee for direction, recognizing no claim, caution or caution as entitled to preference, interacting to none, owing fealty or allegiance to none. It is true that your Chairman in common with other Whigs had opinions in regard to measures that had been discussed before the country, that differed with those of a very large number of the members of this Committee. The individual right to hold and freely express those opinions, or their opposites, consistently with the obligations that bound us together as a Committee, was tacitly conceded. The evil results that followed efforts made in previous Committees to suppress legitimate expression of opinion concerning public men and public measures, were deeply felt, and more emphatically remembered when the power of preventing was withdrawn from the hand that over-ruled the deliberations of the General Committee of Democratic Whig Young men. The full consideration of our relations and the mutual duties of the Committee and its members, the Chairman assumed to be accorded to your Chairman on all occasions, indicate, that we attained the outward semblance, at least, of union and harmony in the Committee. It was this conciliatory action that procured representation in the Joint Executive Committee on equal terms with the ex-officio General Committee, and concurred action upon subject matter reported by the Joint Executive Committee.

The people have exhibited a kindly feeling towards this Committee, by selecting, at the late election, from our number a City Judge, a Representative in Congress, a member of the State Legislature, a Governor of the Almshouse, and several members of the Common Council. If any unobtrusive merit pending for appreciation has been overlooked in the bestowal of rewards, have faith that the people who have shown themselves to be so magnanimous and generous, will hereafter do it full justice. The Register of the County about one, for years a prominent member, and the three elected Surrogate of the County, who was regularly nominated in the Broadway House for a three years' term, who was twice renominated by acclamation, and who was the only candidate before the whole City and county at the late election, who received a majority of the votes cast for a particular office, filled for a term the Chairmanship of the General Committee of Democratic Whig Young Men. It is charged that party morals are reduced so low that the nomination of such a man is only made to secure the success of the whole ticket with inferior triumphs as the special object; or, because those whose influence is directly felt in making nominations, have not the capacity to fill, or the courage to submit to fill the office with one of their number. That such considerations have weight with some in party Conventions there can be no doubt; but the support given to the Surrogate elect in Whig Conventions, was impelled by better and more manlike considerations. That support was an evidence of the virtue existing in every individual, and in every nomination of individuals.

It was the meed of approbation to a faithful public officer and a faithful member of the Whig party, and it was a recognition of the services he had rendered to the Whig party by the dignity, purity and ability of his conduct. Through such men we trace out the landmarks of party, which cannot to be effective or honorable, and ought to cease to be successful, when it permits the latter to prevail over the moral influence.

Let those individuals who withdraw from political association with the reasoned conclusion that between political lodge in University-place, ponder upon the wreck of their Mayoralty venture, and by analogy reason upon the probable result in the choice of a Surrogate at the late election, if they had undertaken to steer that bark single-handed. To practically carry out the intention of our Democratic institutions, combinations must be formed to accomplish the expression of the wishes of the majority in the guidance of public affairs. Let us then affectionately invite our quondam friends who now company in their icy grandeur that Reform lodge in University-place, back to the genial society of the Broadway House, where manoeuvre through whose impertinence they enjoy the large fraternity acquaintance, have to congregate. They will find no cause for complaint from the association. The great bearing of several responsibility may be preserved in all its stiffness; and we should promise us an indorsement, and with their aid carry out the promise, to reform our primary elections. These primary elections are wonderful institutions. They came in with the cheap, cash newspapers, when the masses began to read for themselves, instead of being read for and done for by the few. The primary elections are recognized by a law of the State which makes it a special duty of the Police Department of the City of New-York to guard and protect them. Members of the Committee, guard and protect your primary elections. Redeem them—you ought not to wait for successes when they stand it.

Among the officers elected to that numbers of this Committee have been elected to fill, in that of Governor of the Almshouse. The gentleman elected was not nominated by a Whig Convention at the Broadway House. For particulars of the way the thing was done, you must ask "SAM." If you require information. I have never sought his acquaintance,—never formed it. In justice to that unpretentious individual, we must acknowledge his aid to numerous here at the late elections. If you see him, he may tell you that if our Nominating Conventions had been quashed a little more with the idea of success, he would have done still more for you.

I congratulate you, individually, upon the elections of MYRON H. CLARK, HENRY J. RAYMOND, and the rest of the Whig State ticket.

The passage of the so-called Nebraska bill elicited no comment from this Committee in the shape of published resolutions. As to what was our duty in the matter, there may be a difference of opinion. For myself I received the blow with a tolerably good temper, and was half inclined to turn the other cheek up. That blow negatived the finality doctrine applied to legislative compromises repealable, and paved the way for the vindication of a higher doctrine, that Presidential legislators must not presume to tell the people that they have performed a duty properly devolving upon their successors. Therefore, it is to be hoped that Congress will legislate for the Territories, within the conditions of the Constitution, regardless of the bowels of section. When, because of that legitimate exercise of the powers conferred upon our representatives in Congress by the Constitution, our brothers of other sections treat us with the accusation of an unfraternity that is foreign to our natures, reply firmly, that we seek nothing that is not lawful, and nothing incompatible with the dictates of our consciences—that we will share with them our wealth, and sacrifice in their defence our blood—but that with a crime of their conceived interest, to use unwillingly so harsh a term, in view of the fact that it is hereditary, and not of their own origination, we will have no participation. We have enough of our own to answer for.

Permit me to reiterate thanks for the honor I have received at your hands. I wish you prosperity in all your well-intentioned undertakings.

Proposed Constitution of the Democratic Party.

The Young Men's Union Democratic Club met on Saturday evening, at the Chinese Assembly Rooms. Mr. JOHN COCHRANE, President, occupied the chair.

The occasion and purport of the meeting was briefly explained in a few introductory remarks by Mr. COCHRANE.

The Circular issued by the Young Men's Democratic Union Club was then read.

In compliance with the Circular, Mr. COCHRANE continued, a meeting was held at the place designated, on the evening of the 2d inst., when initiatory steps were taken, resolutions passed, and Committees appointed, toward the accomplishment of the design set forth in the Circular. They were now met a second time, to complete, as far as practicable the work then began. The object of the meeting was simply the adoption of a course deemed best calculated to insure the union of the discordant sections of the Democratic party. In the campaign just closed, he was happy to say, the masses of the party, through effort for the accomplishment of one single and mighty aim, had been brought into an intimate fusion. It was desirable that this commingling of feeling and interest might continue. To effect this, it was suggested:

First—That all Associations organized under the name of Seymour Clubs be known hereafter under the title of Democratic Union Clubs.

Second—That this Club be organized in every ward of the City where now incomplete or unorganized.

Third—That each of these clubs thus formed have its own delegates to represent them in Tammany Hall, which is to constitute the central body, having supervision over the whole. He proposed, as the best course, that it be ascertained in the outset how many Wards were represented, and in how many Union Clubs organizations were already complete. It could then be determined whether there were sufficient members present, and so apportion away the different wards as to justify an election of officers.

The Secretary called the role.

Nineteen Wards were found to be represented in the meeting, but the numbers being so unequal from the various Wards, he thought it not advisable to proceed to an election.

Mr. LONDELL offered a resolution that a Committee be appointed to report names for officers to be voted for by the delegates present at the next meeting.

Mr. MERIN proposed, as an amendment, that the meeting proceed to an election to-night.

Col. HIGGY said the resolution was obviously out of order, unless a resolution passed at the last meeting to first rescinded.

The resolution offered by Mr. LONDELL was withdrawn.

The following resolution, presented by Mr. WAINWRIGHT, was passed unanimously:

Resolved, That five delegates from each Ward be elected by the Union Democratic Association, to assemble at the Chinese Assembly Rooms, on Saturday next, for the purpose of electing officers to this body, and for whatever other business it may see fit to transact.

Messrs. MERIN, MURPHY, ANDREWS, CARR, and LONDELL were, on motion, appointed a Committee to draw up rules and regulations for the Government, to be presented at the next meeting.

The meeting then adjourned.

A PRIZE FIGHT.

INTERESTING FROM JAPAN.

ADDITIONAL FROM CHINA.

The steamer North Star, from Aspinwall, with a week's later news from California, and interesting political news from the Sandwich Islands, arrived on Saturday morning.

Purser HULL, as usual, obliges us with early packages, while the Express Companies are as punctual as ever in their favors.

The Pacific Mail steamer Golden Age sailed from San Francisco Nov. 16 at 10 o'clock A. M., arriving at Acapulco 23d, at 7 o'clock P. M., and left Acapulco for Panama 24th, at 6 o'clock A. M.; arrived at Panama 26th, at 6 o'clock P. M., 11 days 20 hours running time from San Francisco. The passengers, mails, and treasure that came by her, left Panama for Aspinwall on the morning of the 28th. The passengers arrived at Aspinwall the same day, but the mail car ran off the track, and did not arrive at Aspinwall until the morning of the 30th.

The United States Mail steamer North Star arrived at Aspinwall 28th Nov., at 10 o'clock P. M., and sailed again for New-York, 30th, at 2 o'clock P. M. Experienced strong gales from the northward during the entire homeward passage.

The steamer Falcon, from Havana, arrived at Aspinwall on the morning of the 30th, was to sail again same day on the return trip.

The Railroad is progressing finely, and as the rains are about over, we may look forward to an early completion of that great work.

The passengers from New-York by the North Star left Aspinwall for Panama on the morning of the 29th, and got through to Panama that afternoon. By the time the next run of passengers cross the Isthmus the rains will have entirely ceased, and they will be enabled to make the transit from Ocean to Ocean in five or six hours.

The North Star brings home several passengers that left New-York by her on the 20th of October. They went from Panama to San Francisco in steamer Golden Gate, (which steamer made the run in 11 days 16 hours,) and had 3 days to transact their business in San Francisco before the sailing of the Golden Age. Their absence from New-York extends over a space of only 49 days.

Commander CADWALLADER RINGGOLD, of the Pacific Exploring Expedition, Mr. F. D. STEWART, his Secretary, Mr. E. A. LE ROY, bearer of dispatches from China and Sandwich Islands, and Mr. J. J. WHIPPLE, U. S. N., are among the passengers per North Star. The above named gentlemen arrived at San Francisco on the 11th Nov. in the U. S. steamer Susquehanna, from the Sandwich Islands.

THE JAPAN EXPEDITION.

Interesting and Detailed Account of the Cruise of the Susquehannah.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sunday, Nov. 12, 1854.

The United States steam-frigate Susquehanna arrived here yesterday from Hong Kong, viâ Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

In obedience to an order from the Navy Department, the Susquehanna was detached from the Japan Expedition, and placed at the disposal of our Commissioner to China in March last. Since that time she has visited various ports in China, and is now about terminating a long and eventful cruise, having been in commission for nearly four years.

On the first day of August, Mr. MCLANE, the Commissioner, left Shanghai, China, for the southern ports. At Whampoa or Canton he met Commodore PERRY. By an arrangement between them the Powhatan was substituted for the Susquehanna, and the exchange was made at Hong Kong in the latter part of August. After taking on board coal and provisions, and having been detained a day or two in consequence of a court-martial, the Susquehanna on the 6th of September last sailed from China for the United States. She was ordered home by the way of the Pacific, in obedience to instructions received from the Secretary of the Navy, who directed that she should touch on the way at the Sandwich Islands, San Francisco, Valparaiso &c., thence proceeding to Philadelphia; but the addition of stopping at Japan originated with Commodore PERRY. All this was a great act of injustice to the crew, whose terms of service had long since expired. It was but due to them to send the ship home by the shortest route.

From Hong Kong to the coast of Japan, the Susquehanna towed the store-ship Southampton, loaded with coal for herself and the Mississippi—which vessel was to follow upon the same route in a few days. In doing this, much time and coal were consumed: for even when 300 miles from Simoda—the port in Japan to which she was bound—the Susquehanna, without a tow, could easily have been one-third the distance to the Sandwich Islands, with the same consumption of fuel.

Two days out, Passed Assistant-Surgeon HAMILTON, who was sent on board an invalid, died. His remains were carried to Japan, and there interred.

On the 10th of September the group of islands to the southward of the principal islands of the Japanese Empire were made. Close to one of these, called on the French chart Pouilpon, the two vessels passed. This was observed to be volcanic, and in a state of eruption at the time; the smoke issuing from the crater being for the most part yellow and sulphury in appearance. Parts of the island are well wooded and a portion of it is in a high state of cultivation. On the south side there is a village, situated in an agreeable valley, and rendered picturesque by terraces. The weather was good, and a fine opportunity was afforded the ships for running through Van Diemen's Straits, and making a thorough examination of them. But no advantage was taken of this.

Upon the coast of Japan the same current, the same weather, the same tide-rips, and even precisely the same weed, are to be found as are met with in our own Gulf Stream. In truth, it is supposed that there is no characteristic existing in the stream of the Atlantic, that is not to be found in that of the Pacific, even to the ranges of cold water, or Polar current underneath. This is a matter which will hereafter, in all probability, be thoroughly investigated.

Towards night on the 12th of September, the Southampton parted her tow-line. It was blowing very strong from the northward and east, and it was not managed to take her in again. The steamer kept of Hio a few minutes, but was soon driven from it by the gale. She was now left to take her chance, however, next morning, and on the day was dim, and the wind moderate, the steamer proceeded more safely on her course, leaving the mountain to pursue him. Tori-Jamma, a volcanic peak twelve thousand feet high, was seen in the afternoon, and at night the ship had arrived close to some of the islands of the Bay of Jeddo. Early in the morning of the 15th she run into the harbor of Simoda, and the Southampton arrived on the following day. Soon after the Susquehanna entered the port, the Harbor Master, one of the pilots, and several officers and interpreters went on board. Some of these were recognized by the officers of the ship as old friends whom they had met on her two previous visits to Japan.

The harbor of Simoda, one of the ports agreed upon for trade with Americans, is merely an indentation, of no very great extent, at the coast of Nipkon. There is not room for half-a-dozen vessels to lie in safety. It has no open exposure to the southward and westward; and its facilities as a coal-depôt for steamers from China to California are said to be inferior to the Bonin Islands. It is, however, one of the most picturesque spots in the world. Hills rise on all sides, with intervening valleys stretching to the water's edge, and here and there a rock rears itself upon a salient point, or directly from the bay. On some of these rocks small white cottages cling to the sides, shaded by the foliage of overhanging trees.

The town of Simoda is situated on a creek emptying into the harbor. The streets are wide, and the houses generally of one story. There are no tilted into years by what a sailor would call a shifting bulkhead—that is, the house may be composed of but one large apartment, and partitions can be put up throwing it into a number of small chambers, so that the inside of the same house will present a very different appearance in the daytime and at night. Simoda does not appear well calculated, upon the whole, for a place of trade, and it can never become an active commercial town. Neither is it a manufacturing town, as it was represented to be by the Japanese while negotiating with Commodore PERRY. This, added to the fact that the harbor is a bad one, will make it appear evident that the Japanese Commissioners got the better of us in the treaty, so far as this place is concerned.

The surrounding country (wherever nature will permit it) is highly cultivated. The valley of the creek is laved and well tilled, yielding rice, millet, Egyptian corn, and maize. The corn produced by the last are very small, being not more than from two to four inches in length. Sweet potatoes and the egg-plant are also raised in great abundance. There are no horses about Simoda, and bullocks are made to supply their places. Provisions, with the exception of eggs and vegetables, cannot be obtained here. The shark and bonito are the only large fish found in the harbor. One of the latter species, supplied to a portion of the Susquehanna's ship's company, poisoned all who ate of it; no one died, though several of the crew were seriously ill for a day or two. This fish must, of course, feed upon the copper bottoms, which are known to be very numerous here. Small fish are plentiful, and they seem to form almost the only article of food of the inhabitants, besides rice.

Beauty is rare in Simoda; and there seems to be very few of the higher classes residing there. Some pretty girls were seen; but the married women in Japan disfigure themselves by blacking their teeth with the betel nut, and shaving their eyebrows. This is done that no one may be tempted by their beauty after marriage. An exceptionable precaution; for, like all women who mature early, they fall rapidly. The gross immorality and degradation immediately among the lower orders of the people, exceeds everything of the kind to be met with in any other part of the world. The females almost are half or entirely naked all the time, weather permitting," of course. Women may be seen bathing in the streets, in front of their own doors, in an entire state of nudity; and there are two bathhouses at Simoda where the sexes bathe indiscriminately—disregarding entirely all decency, and throwing the fashionable frequenters of Rockaway and Newport quite into the shade. The dress of the women of Japan is, by no means, to be commended either for its elegance, gracefulness, or propriety. It consists, separately, of body and skirt, both of which are open. The former falls loosely from the shoulders, at times partially exposing the breast in front, or on the side. The latter is very narrow, and drawn tightly around the waist and hips, leaving an opening at the side, only about half doubling. This combination of the hips, added to the sandals that are worn, rendered the gait in walking extremely awkward. The hair, however, is arranged in the most artistic style, which, if it could be once seen by an American artiste, would doubtlessly astonish the Chinese, Japanese, or any other coast in vogue. In their houses, public streets, and persons, the Japanese are cleanly. Concubinage is common in Japan. Besides a wife—who is always the mistress of the family—every man who can afford it seems to have from one to five or six concubines—depending upon his means or inclination—who are bought from their parents while young. These concubines do not, of course, either black their teeth or shave their eyebrows, and are often quite comely. They are made to perform the duties of mail-servants, and are frequently, through jealousy, very cruelly treated. At Simoda, this class appeared to admire the foreigners very much, and were, in consequence, often ordered out of their sight.

There are a number of temples near Simoda, and attached to each is a graveyard. At one of these, situated near a village, there is a place set apart for Americans. Here Dr. HEDGES was buried, being laid by the side of two others who died on the second visit of the ships. There do not appear to be any tombs with monuments over them, scattered about the country, in Japan, as in China. But the Japanese bury within an enclosure, generally if not always in the vicinity of a temple. Each grave has its appropriate stone, as with us, and by many of them are overgrown with vases or joints of bamboo, containing water, which seem to be the favorites of the Japanese. Cups of fresh water are also set by the graves, and in these birds of dazzling plumage and delightful song come and drink. The graves of the Americans were not forgotten!

When attending weddings, and perhaps at funerals also, the Japanese wear a peculiar head-dress, but whether the custom extends to festival is conjecture. The men appear in every hue, from up into the unseemly shape of a stagnant tree, and the women in black crape hoods, with capes attached, falling over their shoulders.

On the 20th of September the Susquehanna finished coaling, and the Governor of Simoda visited her, being entertained by Captain BINGHAM. He is a tall, fine looking man, of commanding presence, and intelligent expression, and decidedly the best specimen, in appearance, of any Japanese official yet seen by the Americans. After obtaining wood and water, the steamer was declared by the commercial gale for two or three days, but finally left Simoda on the 24th, although it was blowing strong at the time from the north and north. A few hours out of Simoda she passed Oshima, and a last view was taken of the famous Fuji. Oshima is a volcanic island, rising abruptly off the mouth of Jeddo Bay; the mountain is bearing above snowcapped from Cape Sagami, the most point of the entrance. There are several large towns upon the island, and to this place Japanese nobles

[illegible] Sunday, the 8th of October, in latitude 38° 19', she crossed the meridian of 180°—thus gaining a day; making two eighths in the same month, and two Sundays in one week. Here she met an easterly wind again, but it was light; and as she had now consumed her fuel so long, she was able to increase her allowance of coal for the twenty-four hours. The steamer after this experienced variable weather, and winds alternating between an easterly and westerly direction—the approach of the former being indicated by clouds and the appearance of rain—until the 15th, when she struck the northeast trade, and two days afterwards reached Oahu, having made the passage from Japan in twenty-four days.

On the 19th the Susquehanna entered the harbor of Honolulu, crossing the bar without difficulty, and on the 20th commenced coaling. During her stay at this port the steamer was visited by an immense number of people, both foreign and native. Her officers were presented at the Court of His Hawaiian Majesty, KAMEHAMEHA III, and the King, one day, accompanied by his Ministers, paid a visit of state to the ship. The Governor of Oahu, and several other distinguished persons likewise went on board in their official capacities; and on the day of her departure, the King, with a large party were taken on a short excursion to sea, to witness the performance of the ponderous engines of this magnificent ship.

On the 23d the Mississippi arrived at the Islands, she performed the passage in one day less time than the Susquehanna, in consequence of having experienced almost the whole distance good steaming weather. She encountered a severe gale of wind, which carried away a part of one of her paddle-boxes. This, continued, however, but a few hours, and was only a slight detention.

By their presentation at Court, the officers of the Susquehanna were able to examine the "mamo," or great golden mantle, composed of certain two yellow feathers found under the wing of a species of bird peculiar to the Islands of the Pacific, and the manufacture of which occupied nine generations of Kings. They were, too, on one occasion invited to a "luau" feast, and witnessed the "hula-hula," performed by the King's dancing girls.

The people at the Sandwich Islands are ripe for annexation, and there appears but little doubt now, that the King, and Prince ALEXANDER LIHOLIHO, the heir-apparent, have signed a contract, ceding to the United States, upon certain conditions, all the islands composing their dominions. It was thought when the Susquehanna left, that Mr. GREGG, our Commissioner, would have concluded all the necessary preliminaries in about three weeks.

The Susquehanna took her final departure from Honolulu on the 30th, leaving at that port, waiting the result of the negotiations in regard to annexation, the Mississippi, (steamer,) the Portsmouth, (sloop,) and the Mary, (?) Her passage to this port occupied eleven days, and during the greater part of it she experienced strong head winds. To-day she went up to Benicia to take in coal, and will sail for Valparaiso in the course of the month.

The North Star's News.

The North Star was a welcome arrival on Saturday—welcome to Wall-street, which clutched her million and a quarter of dust and coin most greedily, and to the lovers of news, who found in her budget an overplus, not from both shores of the Pacific, and from the islands that enrich it. The proper California news is not of moment. A prize fight and an execution, represent as good as usual from the mines, easy times for money, and a creditable list of marriages and births, with no more deaths than we are accustomed to record, make up this week's account from California.

The Treaty of Annexation of the Sandwich Islands has been approved by the Legislatory unanimously. The Heir Apparent too, who has opposed the measure heretofore, waives his scruples. The King is well disposed, and when a few minor questions are settled, no doubt the document will be dispatched by the Mississippi. We shall probably have authentic demonstration of the King's signature by the next arrival, or by the one succeeding that.

The Mississippi brought to Honolulu details of China news to the 11th of September, (we had received outlined news to the 27th of that month by the Overland and European route,) which show a most distressed condition of affairs. Canton still holds out against a hundred thousand beleaguering Rebels, though many whose habits, sympathies and interests are with the Imperialists are going over to the Rebels for the sake of bread.

The Susquehanna reached San Francisco on the 11th of November—a month to-day—having made her passage from the Japanese port of Simoda to Honolulu in 24 days; during which time her engines stood still but once, while all hands were called to bury the dead. The steamer was ten days at Simoda; the details of her visit there, and the story of her cruise, will be found in our columns; readers will find it exceedingly interesting.

The Oregon and Washington news is much after the usual pattern. Indian attacks and repulses, fears of their continued hostility, fresh tidings of gold findings and corrections of previously exaggerated accounts of the gold found, furnish its staple.

The Temperance Question.

We do not share the apprehensions expressed by some of our cotemporaries, that the Legislature will refuse or fail to pass a law at its coming session prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks. So far as we have any means of forming a judgment upon the subject, a decided majority of both Houses is in favor of such a law. The vote of the State certainly indicates the popular approval of the principle. Gov. Throop was the candidate of those opposed to it. His veto message, in which he not only objected to the specific bill before him, but declared his opposition to any prohibitory law, made his position on this subject distinct and unmistakable; and the acceptance of the nomination made this the prominent issue of the canvass. Judge Ullmann, if it be true, subsequently took very nearly the same ground, and may thus have received some votes from parties opposed to the law. But the whole vote for Clark and three-fourths of that for Ullmann was a Temperance vote. All the force seems to us conclusive as to public sentiment upon that subject. We believe the people of this State, impressed with the magnitude of the evil of intemperance, and despairing of any remedy from existing laws, are in favor of trying the experiment of prohibition. And we do not permit ourselves to doubt that the Legislature represents this sentiment, and will in good faith embody it in Legislative enactment. It is quite possible its action may not be sufficiently ultra to satisfy men of extreme views on this subject,—but it will be none the less decided and beneficial on that account. We do not believe the law of last Session will be repealed; for although it was the best which could be secured under the circumstances, it was not such a law, in all respects, as the judicious friends of prohibition deemed best adapted to advance their cause. Although it was prepared under the auspices of the State Temperance Society, many of its provisions were opposed by decided opponents of the whole movement, and were calculated to render the bill odious with the public and certain to encounter the Governor's veto. Any bill which the coming Legislature may enact must be framed to be executed, and not to be vetoed. If it is designed to be permanently embodied into our State Legislation, it must consult public sentiment and rest upon that as its final and firm support. No law that disregards public opinion,—that needlessly encroaches on private rights and personal liberty,—and that prescribes equal penalties for innocent and for criminal acts, can ever become rooted in our society. The spirit and temper of our people render it impossible. While, therefore, a prohibitory law must of necessity interfere seriously with private interest, it must not wantonly disregard private rights, nor trample upon that sentiment of personal liberty which is the strongest passion of our people, and which, though it may yield to a clear conviction of the public good, cannot be crushed by the despotic dictates of mere fanaticism. Of course, it will not be an easy matter to reconcile the principle of prohibition with these requirements—but that is a difficulty incident to all legislation,—one which must be recognized and solved by that wise prudence which is essential to the just and successful conduct of public affairs. It cannot be ignored, nor can it be rudely disposed of by reckless and extreme provisions. Such a course would inevitably create a reaction in public sentiment, fatal to the movement which those who advise it profess to serve. We have strong confidence in the wisdom and principle of the new Legislature, and in the sound judgment, the clear common sense, and the wise conservatism of Governor Clark.

The New City Hall.

One day last Winter—it was the 19th of January, and snow covered the grass and the gravel of the Park—a fire broke out in the New City Hall. The old rat-hole,—for age is reckoned in buildings not by names or dates so much as by condition,—was in excellent order for burning, and so in a few hours it was a smoking ruin. The Firemen worked nobly to save it, but with becoming resignation when they found it could not be saved. The people did not weep over the smouldering pile, but everybody looked as a man feels when his house, of which he is sick, burns down, and there is no kind of doubt that he will get the whole amount of his insurance.

And yet it was a sad inconvenience to lawyers and judges, and their Honors the Courts. The Common Council could do no less than institute early measures to repair the damages done and furnish accommodations for those who had been burned out. But the old building was proverbially unfit for its appointed uses, and there were large numbers to be accommodated beside its occupants, who now only "stayed along" without elbow room to do the City business in—with cramped bed-rooms where ample offices should be afforded, and mere tinder-boxes on a large scale to preserve priceless records in. The feeling was strong, moreover, that whatever building was erected, it should be one creditable in design, an ornament in its architecture, sufficient in its accommodations, fire proof within and without, and built not for to-day or this year only, but with reference to the wants of several generations to come.

Matters took shape slowly, and definite plans at last were formed. During the Summer, an inquisitive, sharp-eyed man might have found—if any one who had stumbled upon the fact had suggested it to him—a quiet, unobtrusive advertisement, hidden away among the Corporation notices of some of the more modest dailies. The advertisers were evidently modest men. They did not tell their wants with a brazen face, going to the papers of a large circulation and demanding a conspicuous place. They breathed it gently—they held up to a few hundreds the brief statement of their desire—that plans and specifications for a new City Hall would be accepted. But nothing is ever printed that somebody does not read. This advertisement found its happy readers, and in consequence three plans were submitted;—there were probably more, but our anxiety to possess a glimpse of them we were never able to gratify. Of these three the Board of Councilmen selected as the best, that of Messrs. Field & Correja. Upon the merits, and particularly upon the lack of merit of this, we commented at the time. It provided only about sixty rooms where some one hundred and eighty were needed. It designed to erect a plain copy of the present City Hall upon the site of the burnt building, rivaling it in all its inconveniences and surpassing it in many of its defects. The matter went from the Councilmen to the Aldermen, and was by them referred to a Committee. This Committee rejected the project of the other Board and reported one instead, which was prepared some years ago by Martin E. Thompson, Esq., which essentially is as follows: It proposes two buildings of similar size and appearance as the present, to be connected by a gallery to it and to each other; the three to stand parallel to each other,—the rear one nearly upon the site of the burnt building. There is no question that this would furnish a much more desirable and proper City Hall than the project of the Councilmen would. But it lies open to several serious objections. It could not furnish as well-lighted offices for the Departments nor as quiet rooms for the Courts as might easily be given them. It lacks architectural beauty. The central building would not be capable of the best ventilation, and if its exterior were pleasant to the eye, it would be an offence to taste to erect it where two others will necessarily hide it.

As we understand it, the Aldermen were not at liberty to submit any plans that suited them, but only such as had been sent in, in accordance with the proposals of the advertisement.

Now, Mr. Thompson's were not before the Committee that chose Field & Correja's, and they are not all in accordance with the specifications to which the advertisement limited designers. The fact that his are an improvement upon any that the Councilmen saw, is only another reason why the Aldermen should recommit the subject to the Committee, reject all plans at present before them, advertise openly in the papers where it will be read for the plans of architects, and give every man who has an idea a chance to give New-York the benefit of it, that she may erect, when she goes about it, a City Hall worthy of her.

When the discussion was up in the Board on Thursday evening, Alderman Wakeman laid before the Board substantially the plans which we urged some months ago as most nearly meeting the demands of the City. The same will be on exhibition we are informed at the Exchange, at noon to-day. They purpose to erect a building, which when complete would present three several fronts, one upon Broadway, one upon Chambers-street, and one upon Centre-street. There would be no necessity of erecting all of these at present. The City is neither bankrupt nor poor; but while this is a reason for making the City Hall what it should be, it certainly is none for making an extravagant outlay upon it. There will be no extravagance if the people are allowed to see what is going on. They want time to see it, and the City should take time to get the best plans before commencing work. We hope then that the Aldermen will recommit this matter to-night, and take another look at it before committing us to a plan that will not satisfy the public, and to an expense which will not buy the accommodations which our growing business demands.

Kansas and Slavery.

The Missouri Compromise prohibited Slavery from Kansas forever. Its repeal permitted its introduction. Apologists for that repeal urged that it could have no practical effect,—that is only gave to the people the right to do as they should choose about it,—that the settlers were all opposed to Slavery, and that Kansas would inevitably be a free State. Senator Douglas, the nominal author of the movement, said that this would be the result. The election for a Delegate to Congress has resulted in the choice of a pro-Slavery Democrat of the Atchison and Douglas school by a large majority. This shows of how little value were the quieting assurances by which the advocates of the Nebraska bill have endeavored to allay the public sentiment against that measure. Of course it has not been brought about without effort; and the character of that effort, and the success which attended it, illustrate forcibly the real nature of the popular sovereignty pretext upon which the justification of the bill is based.

The President appointed Gen. Reeder Governor of the Territory. The Governor divided the Territory into sixteen districts, appointed Election Judges for them all, and gave them instructions to exclude the votes of all who they should have reason to believe had come into the Territory for the purpose of voting. This gave a single Judge, appointed by a Governor who held office at the will of the President, full power to disfranchise voters at his discretion! This is the style of popular sovereignty that prevails in Kansas. Its practical operation is illustrated by the following paragraphs:

From the Purkville, Mo., Luminary.

Important Movement.—Just before going to press we were informed that immense crowds of Missourians have, within the last two or three days, been going over into Kansas Territory. The numbers are estimated to reach 3,000 or 4,000, most of whom have passed through Independence, Kansas City, and Westport. A deputation was sent to Gov. Reeder to request him to open a polling place at the Shawnee Mission; and he was to take the matter into consideration.

From the Washington Correspondence of the Philadelphia Ledger.

In July last I wrote you that Kansas would not be a Slave State. I am now of a different opinion. The impertinent and insolent interference of your Eastern fanatics—the colonizing as they have done of hundreds of the lowest class of rowdies to browbeat our voters and prevent a fair expression of the popular will, has brought about this result. They have located themselves near the Kansas River, named their City Lawrence, and number, I am told, some hundreds of voters. I have seen some of them, and they are the most unmitigated looking set of blackguards I have ever laid my eyes on.

Up to late in September, there was no excitement in the Territory on this question. Everybody here and in Missouri believed that Kansas would be a free State; but no sooner did these colonists appear here than all the river counties in Missouri—Andrew, Holt, Buchanan, &c., sent over thousands of their young men to counteract their treasonable schemes. They will be successful.

The colonization from the East referred to above is that of emigrants who go to Kansas as settlers for life. They, of course, are excluded from voting. The thousands who go over from Missouri for the purpose of voting, are admitted to the privilege. This is the squatter sovereignty which the present Administration has made the test of democracy, and of fidelity to the Union!

Jury Qualifications.

The Jury that is listening to the Tucke trial at Brooklyn was only obtained after exhausting the whole panel, 45 in number. Most men of intelligence have opinions new-a-days on matters brought so vividly before them as all murder cases in their neighborhood must be. And when the times mellow again, and the newspaper becomes the necessity of the poorest as it now is of all men in common life, if the doctrine is to hold that to have formed an opinion incapacitates a man to sit on the Jury bench, it will be necessary to import Jurors to try our rogues by. The decision of Chief Justice Taney would allow many a man to keep his seat in the Jury-box who has been rejected heretofore. He says, as reported:

"If the Juror has formed an opinion that the prisoner are guilty, and entertains that opinion now without waiting to hear testimony, then he is incompetent. But if, from reading the newspapers or hearing reports, he has impressions on his mind unfavorable to the prisoners, but has no opinion or prejudice which will prevent him from doing impartial justice when he hears the testimony, then he is competent."

☞ By incurring an expense of over a hundred dollars, paid for telegraphic service between here and Washington, we were able to place the Soule correspondence between the French Government and Mr. Mason, as well as abstracts of several Reports, before the Albany Argus, Baltimore Sun, Buffalo Commercial, and some other journals, a good deal sooner than they would have received them from any other quarter. Those papers were quite right in laying the documents before their readers;—but would it have been extravagantly liberal on their part to acknowledge the source from which they got them?

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Death of Lord Dudley Stuart—State of Affairs in the Crimea.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.
London, Tuesday, Nov. 21, 1854.

Death has become so familiar to us in one shape or other; we hear daily of so many well-known men, carried away by bomb or by cholera, that our feelings have become obtuse to such a degree that we view even great catastrophes with a sort of irreflective coldness. There are, however, losses by which even such an apathy is roused up to painful sensibility. I have the sad duty of announcing to you such a loss. Lord Dudley Stuart is no more! It is unnecessary for me to tell what and who that noble-minded nobleman was. His name is so well known as that of a man of most generous feelings, most philanthropic sentiments, most unselfish liberalism, that it would be superfluous to dwell upon his claims to public remembrance. The poor, the destitute, the oppressed knew him, and mourn over his blessed memory. But it is principally by the exiles that his loss will most heavily be felt. He had many different merits and accomplishments as a man, a legislator, and a true Christian, and while his name is to be found wherever a reform in the social or political existence of his country has called on that small phalanx of peaceable warriors, who, unmindful of every secondary considerations, are always ready to support a generous idea, and never hesitate to fight for a lofty truth, he was most unpretending and affable in social life. I reckon as the chief and the special distinction of his life, that imperturbable consistency with which he defended and advocated the cause of universal freedom before the aristocratic assembly of British legislators. He was no flatterer of Kings and Princes, and never left off defending a holy cause after it had been deserted by fortune. It was certainly no common merit in him to vindicate with unflinching energy the rights of the people, the justice of the downtrodden, in face of an audience imbued with aristocratic egotism and pride, devoid of all enthusiasm and feeling, and covering the tribune's voice with sneers and ironical cheers. He did not brave the storm; no, his demeanor was founded on something better than mere bravado, which may yield to superior obstinacy in opposition; he went on impassible in doing his duty, and has not been found wavering for a moment, in the accomplishment of what he considered an obligation contracted towards the cause of justice. Peace to his ashes.

I hear that the Poles and other refugees will express their deep sorrow by a public meeting. That of the 29th will not be forgetful of his memory, and I have reason to believe that Kossuth will be the eloquent interpreter of the sad feelings of his countrymen. The remains of that true nobleman will, I understand, be brought home from Stockholm, where the sad event took place.

The Press has also a loss to lament, that of Mr. Knight Hunt, editor for many years of the Daily News, and the author of a very interesting work on the newspaper history of England.

There has happened nothing important in the Crimea, up to the 12th. You will see by the tone of the papers, as well as the exertions of the allied armies to entrench themselves, that hopes for speedy success are at a discount. It is wonderful how the Russians have gained in number and reputation with the very, same men who studiously underrated their capabilities of any sort. The declaration of Lord Raglan, who is made field marshal, that he would be very glad to command a stronger army than the one he had under his orders, has no little share in opening people's eyes to the dangers of what was announced to be but a mere coup de main. Reinforcements are on the way, no doubt, and more are to be sent, but we hear, at the same time, that the weather in the Euxine was such that no ship had reached Balaklava from the 6th to the 8th. On the other hand, the Russians intend, according to all appearances, a fresh and general attack on the whole line of the besiegers. I should not wonder if the telegraph would announce, this week, a new victory with some more thousands killed on both sides. An official dispatch of Menschikoff, admits that 100 officers and 2,500 men were wounded on the 5th. The number of the dead is not yet given. Recent dispatches from Constantinople say, on the other hand, that the English loss, on the same day, amounts to 2,439 wounded and killed. The French may have lost, perhaps, half that number, which gives for the allies a diminution of strength by about 3,600 men, for one single victory. The public was much shocked at the Governmental style of delicacy displayed by the suppression of that part of Lord Raglan's dispatch which announced the death of three Generals. People say, and very truly too, that the Duke of Newcastle could have sent the sad intelligence to the respective families, at the same time as it ought to have been sent to be printed. But rank and birth must be vindicated here, even on such occasions. The sorrow of a private's mother can surely not be equaled by that of an honorable gentleman-officer's. The affair has, moreover, another side. The engagement of the 5th announced without the occurred death of three Generals, could fairly have been accepted as an important victory, and as such, to influence the public mind as well as the money market. But the event had quite another aspect, when the fact that three Generals are fallen was known. Such an intelligence made people draw conclusions on the number of subaltern officers and common soldiers who must have fallen.

The "English Democrats" seem to be once more disgusted with that state of affairs, and we are glad to hear their voices. They ask, "Who is Napoleon?" in a circular-placard, and organize themselves to prepare for him, if he should come, a "warm reception." I give you the concluding part of that appeal to the people:

"Men of England! Be equal to that great occasion! Rally round the Committee—it is the party movement—it is open to all who are the friends of the people. Poland would stir in her chains; Hungary would thrill with joy; Italy would start with exultation, could they hear that the working-men of England spurned crowned perjury and murder—raised the great watchword of the French Republic once again, and flouted it in the usurper's blushless face.

"Every man's honor is in his own keeping—so is a people's—then save yours, you men of England! Let it not be pawned by privileged miscreants to victorious iniquity. Let it be understood throughout the world, if Napoleon comes, he is the Queen's guest, not the people's; if the Church prays for him, that the people execrate him; if aristocracy fawns on him, that the people spurn him; if usurers drag their patronage to his blood-stained feet, that there is not an honest working-man—an honest tradesman—in England, who would not think it a branding infamy to touch his hand in friendship."

(Signed) Messrs. Chartan, Geo. Taylor, And 24 other names, and the Committee.

Prudent people will, to be sure, not respond to that appeal, and even call it by all sorts of names. It is good, however, that it should stand were it but the sentiments of a few. Numbers do not constitute justice, or the Czar's cause is the most sacred that can be thought of.

I have a great many more subjects to write you about, but I am not at all well, and so I must beg leave to conclude for this time.

Musical.

Academy of Music.—This is the last regular night of the performance of Grisi and Mario. Thanks to the indifferent support of our musical public, the Bostonians will no share the privilege of listening to these great artists. There was a large attendance on Friday, and doubtless will be the same to-night. It is a pity they come too late. "Semiramide," with Mario as Idreno, will be the Opera for to-night.

On Saturday evening, Messrs. Dodworth gave a Grand Concert here. The attendance was unsatisfactorily small, and became smaller before the termination of the Concert.

A grand orchestra of sixty performers; a full military band, (according to Messrs. Dodworth's idea of a "full" military band,) and the admirable Serenading Band, were the principal attractions offered in the programme. The orchestra was, of course, the best feature, but the conductor was utterly inefficient. Mr. Bristow brought out some delicate shades of instrumentation, whilst conducting the charming allegretto from his symphony in D minor. The bates becomes him better than Mr. H. B. Dodworth—probably from being more used to it. We have not space to refer to the programme in extenso, but may mention that two of the pieces in it possessed all the objectionable characteristics of Jullien, with none of his genius for musical painting. The "Musical Panorama of Broadway in 1848" and the "Historical Sketch of New-York" are alike destitute of merit. They have no form, and are excessively mediocre in every dramatic point of view.

Mrs. Georgiana Stuart and Mr. E. K. Baxter were the vocalists of the evening. Both ladies possess well cultivated and pleasing voices, but lack power for such a large building.

Although by no means favorably impressed with the first Concert here, we trust they will deserve sufficient support to justify their continuance. There is a want, a great want of an independent orchestra to perform the works of native composers. Such an orchestra can be had easily enough, and there is certainly no better place for hearing it than the Academy. But the brass band might be dispensed with; it is very good, undoubtedly, but can be heard to greatest perfection in the street.

Broadway Theatre.—The "Midsummer Night's Dream" will be revived to-night, with the original cast and all the beautiful scenery.

Wallack's Theatre.—To-night, another new piece will be produced, entitled "A Gentleman from Ireland." Mr. Brougham, Mr. Dyott, and other leading members of the Company, are in the cast. "Two to One" will be repeated every night this week.

Burton's Theatre.—The "Upper Ten and Lower Twenty" drew crowded houses all last week, but has been withdrawn for other novelties. To-night, Mr. Dion Boucicault's local review called "Apollo in New-York" is to be produced.

Metropolitan Theatre.—The new play of "Schamyl, or the Prophet's Son" will be brought out here to-night in a manner "regardless of expense." The tragedian, Mr. James Anderson, takes the leading part.

Niblo's Garden.—"La Sonnambula," in English, with M'lle Nau as Amina, and Mr. St. Albyn as Elvino, to-night.

Barnum's.—Mr. J. R. Scott commences a short engagement here to-night, and plays Damon to Mr. Clarke's Pythias. In the afternoon, "Quite at Home," and the "Bachelor's Torment."

Wood's Varieties.—Mechanics' Hall, No. 472 Broadway. The admirable company at this establishment, and the exceedingly attractive programme they issue, afford abundant delight to large audiences. Mr. Wood has just effected an engagement with the wonderful Signor Frank Carlo and his talented children, who will produce several novelties in rapid succession.

Christy & Wood's Minstrels, No. 444 Broadway.—The immortal George appears to-night in the Opera of the "Virginny Cupid." The best kind of negro minstrelsy can be heard at this establishment.

Buckley's Serenaders, No. 539 Broadway.—The musical fairy extravaganza of "Beauty and the Beast" has created a furor and draws hugely. It is not easy to find a more laughable entertainment than that furnished at this establishment.

Paul Julien, the celebrated violinist, has arrived in the city, and will remain a few days prior to continuing his farewell musical tour of the Union.

Australia.

We have received Sydney papers to date, Sept. 23, and Hobart Town journals to the 24th. There is nothing of interest here to be found in the Sydney papers. We find the following return, showing the number of voters in each electoral District of the island of Van Diemen's Land, in August, 1854, in a Hobart Town paper:

Hobart Town, 2,370; Launceston, 1,063; Buckingham, 646; Westbury, 614; Cornwall, 325; Ouse, 344; Longford, 312; Campbell Town, 301; Cumberland, 274; Richmond, 265; Brighton, 264; Morven, 261; Sorell, 233; Huon, 136; New-Norfolk, 177. Total number of voters, 7,344.

In the Hobart Free Press of September we find grievous complaints of the increase of crime in that place and in the regions round about. On a recent opening of the Circuit Court, the Judge stated that out of 34 cases 7 were charged with murder, 14 with violence of one description or another, and the remainder had been committed for larceny or robbery. As usual, the vice of drunkenness was the stimulating cause in the majority of cases, and it really was frightful to contemplate the enormous evils, which were visited upon society through its instrumentality. Drunkenness stalked abroad, through the streets of Bathurst, from early dawn to midnight. On Sunday morning last he was at his drinking in a dog and cats fight in the public streets, and gave two drunken women, who had broken out of several men in a state of intoxication through the streets of the city. Such occurrences of violence in the streets prompted themselves, in whatever part of the town he happened to visit, whenever his judicial duty brought him hither.

New-Zealand.

They have a General Assembly in New Zealand worthy of particular note. The New-Zealander of the 19th, referring to the prorogation of the General Assembly, says:

"It is our duty this day to record the termination of the first session of the New-Zealand Parliament. We believe that according to law it is necessary, in order to constitute a session, that at least one bill shall have passed both Houses. This requirement has been complied with, and therefore it was so far a complete session. One bill, and only one—to authorize the sale of spirituous liquors on the premises for the use of licensable members—has been passed during a session of two months and a half. This, we assure our distant readers, is not a joke or a caricature, but a grave and literally accurate statement.

City Mortality.

The City Inspector's report of the interments during the past week shows an increase of the number of deaths over the previous week of about one hundred. The health of the City, however, generally, is more than ordinarily good.

Naval.—Chief Engineer King, of the United States Navy, and for some time past the Inspecting Engineer at this Port, has been detailed to supervise the construction of the machinery for the new steam-frigate Wabash, at Philadelphia. Chief Engineer Everett succeeds Mr. King.

☞ The gentleman who sent us the notice, soliciting contributions in aid of Mrs. Hale, will please call at the Times Office (Editorial Rooms) between 1 and 2 o'clock this afternoon.

A CHURCH CASE OF LONG STANDING.—There has been before the Supreme Court for the last fortnight, a case of much interest to the members of Bruce-square Church. It appears that many years ago, Miss HAYCOCK, aged of Governor Hatch, COCK of revolutionary memory, bequeathed by will to the Bruce-square Church, for a parsonage house, the entire name of the Church, the building on Grove near Thompson-street now occupied by Dr. LUTHER, its pastor. This building, at the time of its bequeathal, was an commodious mansion, in a rural neighborhood, in a-lay-out surrounded by other dwellings. For the last quarter of a century, however, dwellings have crowded, and stores and business offices have taken their places, until at last it became quite unsuitable as a dwelling place, but it is quite valuable for business purposes, it being a square lot with some six thousand feet of land, worth, perhaps, $6,000.

The proprietors of the Church petitioned the Court for leave to sell this land and building, and purchase a more suitable residence for their pastor. The heirs of Miss HAYCOCK say that if the building is discontinued as a parsonage house, it must revert to them. During the long time that it has been before the Court there has been some talk of a compromise between the heirs and the Church, but nothing has been effected. It is thought that the Court may give an interlocutory decree and the Church and Society will then decide upon the course to be pursued.

NEW-JERSEY.

The License Question in Jersey City—Judge Depeyster's Opinion.

The question of liquor selling and the operations of the Carson League continue to be the all-absorbing topics in Jersey City, among both the friends and foes of the traffic. Those persons who now are or were engaged in the liquor traffic at the time that the Carson League opened "the vials of wrath" upon them, regarded the issue of the certiorari by Judge POTTS, out of the Supreme Court, as a total suspension of the prosecutions going on against them, and the liquor business was freely resumed. But Judge DAYTON's opinion, read to the Common Council on Tuesday evening last, and the support which the Aldermen offer to the Recorder and City Attorney, together with the announcement that the prosecutions will continue, has considerably renewed the fears and apprehensions of the liquor sellers. The opinion takes the ground, at the outset, that the charter of the city vests in the Mayor and Common Council all legislative power in reference to the subject matter therein referred to; and they in this subject are in the place of the Legislature, and whatever they might have done, if acting de novo, they may do. The Charter authorizes the Mayor and Common Council "to license, regulate, or prohibit the sale or traffic, and to prohibit all traffic in, or sale of, intoxicating drink or drinks." The ordinance, which has been passed upon the basis of the authority above given, does not exceed the powers of the Charter. With reference to the query—"Can a defendant be denied to them a trial by jury?" the Judge asserts that they can, as a variety of such cases have arisen, and it has been so since our earliest history. The property rights of citizens are constantly interfered with where no right to trial by jury is allowed. It is held that the words of the Constitution are fully satisfied by preserving the trial by jury in all criminal cases, and trials of right in suits at common law." The violation of the ordinance in question is not a crime, nor is the proceeding before the Recorder a suit at common law. To extend the right of trial by jury to all cases growing out of the police regulations of a large city would be not merely an embarrassment, but it would actually destroy all healthy and energetic action upon the part of a city magistrate. Neither do the charter and ordinances themselves guarantee the right to a trial by jury. The ordinance authorizes the Recorder to impose fine, but not to imprison as a punishment for violating the ordinance. Imprisonment may follow by contempt of Court in the nonpayment of the fine, and may continue until the fine is paid, and this provision is nothing more than the common law case of which the statute is full.

ACCIDENT AT FISHKILL.—A serious accident occurred at Fishkill on the 5th. It appears that Augustus Lounsbury of Fishkill, was ascending a ladder in a new building near the landing when he accidentally fell through the floor timbers to the ground, receiving such injuries in the spinal column that he became instantly paralyzed from the shoulders downward. There is no hope of his recovery.

A young man, named Henry Snell, of Hartford, County, was found dead in his bed on Wednesday; the cause ascribed was apoplexy. The deceased was a "nothing," and by almost nightly experiments had somewhat shattered his system, and had been advised by physicians to abandon the practice.

STEAMBOAT CASE.

The case of Jacob Sherrets vs. The Steamboat New-York, which was commenced yesterday, was continued this morning. The suit is brought by the owners of the barge Rose, to recover damages for the sinking of the barge while being towed by the steamboat from New-York to Albany, on the 25th day of August, 1853, the steamboat was employed to tow the barge with her cargo of 213 tons of coal, and that the crew, while being towed, by the carelessness of those on board the steamboat, sowed under and sunk.

The claimants deny any fault on their part, and allege that the barge was towed at the risk of her owners, and the steamboat is not liable for the accident in this case.

For libelant, Mr. Betts; for claimants, Mr. Beckley.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—Dec. 8.

Before Mitchell, P. J., and Clerke and Roosevelt, J. J.

ASSIGNMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

C. made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, containing a provision, that after payment in full, the surplus should be returned to him. Held, valid.

Ely vs. Cook.—The object of this action is to rescind an assignment made by Mr. Cook, to Trustees and Creditors. By the instrument Mr. Cook conveyed to Messrs. Foot & Gardner all his property, real and personal, (it is not to divert and the country generally, to be applied "in proportions to the amount of debt," to receive the money, and when they are fully paid, the residue, and to pay over the surplus to the said party of the first part."—Mr. Cook—the assignor. The question in this case is, whether the latter clause, providing that the surplus should be returned to the assignor, after payment in full, will render the assignment void?

The case was tried before Judge Edwards, without a jury. He held that the assignment was not fraudulent or void, and dismissed the complaint. From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

The case was argued by Messrs. Chas. B. Smith, for the plaintiff, and by Messrs. Hoffman and Dwight, for the defendant.

ROOSEVELT, J.—The assignment was in this case a transfer of all the debtor's property, to be sold, to discharge his assignees and creditors to preference, and provided for no further gain, until and unless the creditors should be paid and satisfied." In that event, and in that event only, the assignor were to receive the surplus to Cook the debtor. If such an assignment, on its face, fraudulent? Or the mark an assignment, without a resulting trust of surplus, or said to be a transfer made for the use of the party making the same? It is admitted that without any express direction as to a surplus, if any, a trust, by operation of law, would have resulted in favor of the assignor, and that such a resulting trust would not have affected the validity of the transfer. How then can an express direction of the same provision import an act that under the law, without the words, would have resulted and existed, be adjudged fraudulent?

Such assignments, when made in good faith, are no more fraudulent for the use of the assignor than any ordinary mortgages for the use of the mortgagor. In the one case, as in the other, if there be a surplus on the sale, it goes, as it obviously ought to go, and as the instrument provides it shall go, to the party making the mortgage or assignment. There is no "use" in either case, incident to the transfer, but and a "use" for which the transfer was made. And in this lies the whole difference—a difference, not verbal or technical, but founded in common sense and the relations of debtor, (who most unfortunately for the cause of diminishing litigation, has been judged the party to be benefited by the transfer,) and creditor. Where a debtor, perfectly competent, wishes to prefer, the ordinary course of conveying a share of property, and therefore makes an assignment solely for that object, that debtor, and his creditor, by reason of the creditor's loss—such a transfer, it is obvious, although nominally "for the use of others," is really, in the usual expression, "for the use of the person making the same," and therefore fraudulent and void. Kelsey vs. Stevens, 15 Barbour, 64. Ogden vs. Peters, 15 Barb. 549. But where, on the contrary, the property of one debtor is of a doubtful character, and may, or may not, be sufficient to satisfy his creditors, he authorizes his assignee to sell, and his primary object and duty, from assignment in such case, instead of violating the policy of the law on the subject of conveyances, would be in harmony with both, it would, in the language of Mr. Justice Strong, "not only be exempt from the charge of fraud, but quite in accordance with it."

If such assignments for embarrassed debtors are ever valid, the one under consideration, it seems to me, must have attained. It cannot be contended, however, that the argument appeared to convert the point. Were it not, he said, by reason of the provision which did not exist in the case of a mere transfer, it would be, in the mean, the only way, and the only one, in which the debtor could, without sacrificing, or risking the sacrifice of his property, secure the payment of his creditors. These instruments are not, in fact, or in purpose, they are not law, an advantage, but, in fact, and in purpose, they are, and are intended and used, to prevent, and avoid, the sacrifice of property, and to secure the payment of debts. Kelsey vs. Stevens, 15 Barbour, 64. Ogden vs. Peters, 15 Barb. 549. But where, on the contrary, the property of one debtor is of a doubtful character, and may, or may not, be sufficient to satisfy his creditors, he authorizes his assignee to sell, and his primary object and duty, from assignment in such case, instead of violating the policy of the law on the subject of conveyances, would be in harmony with both, it would, in the language of Mr. Justice Strong, "not only be exempt from the charge of fraud, but quite in accordance with it."

The Charter authorizes the Mayor and Common Council "to license, regulate, or prohibit the sale or traffic, and to prohibit all traffic in, or sale of, intoxicating drink or drinks." The ordinance, which has been passed upon the basis of the authority above given, does not exceed the powers of the Charter. With reference to the query—"Can a defendant be denied to them a trial by jury?" the Judge asserts that they can, as a variety of such cases have arisen, and it has been so since our earliest history. The property rights of citizens are constantly interfered with where no right to trial by jury is allowed. It is held that the words of the Constitution are fully satisfied by preserving the trial by jury in all criminal cases, and trials of right in suits at common law." The violation of the ordinance in question is not a crime, nor is the proceeding before the Recorder a suit at common law. To extend the right of trial by jury to all cases growing out of the police regulations of a large city would be not merely an embarrassment, but it would actually destroy all healthy and energetic action upon the part of a city magistrate. Neither do the charter and ordinances themselves guarantee the right to a trial by jury. The ordinance authorizes the Recorder to impose fine, but not to imprison as a punishment for violating the ordinance. Imprisonment may follow by contempt of Court in the nonpayment of the fine, and may continue until the fine is paid, and this provision is nothing more than the common law case of which the statute is full.

ACCIDENT AT FISHKILL.—A serious accident occurred at Fishkill on the 5th. It appears that Augustus Lounsbury of Fishkill, was ascending a ladder in a new building near the landing when he accidentally fell through the floor timbers to the ground, receiving such injuries in the spinal column that he became instantly paralyzed from the shoulders downward. There is no hope of his recovery.

A young man, named Henry Snell, of Hartford, County, was found dead in his bed on Wednesday; the cause ascribed was apoplexy. The deceased was a "nothing," and by almost nightly experiments had somewhat shattered his system, and had been advised by physicians to abandon the practice.

STEAMBOAT CASE.

The case of Jacob Sherrets vs. The Steamboat New-York, which was commenced yesterday, was continued this morning. The suit is brought by the owners of the barge Rose, to recover damages for the sinking of the barge while being towed by the steamboat from New-York to Albany, on the 25th day of August, 1853, the steamboat was employed to tow the barge with her cargo of 213 tons of coal, and that the crew, while being towed, by the carelessness of those on board the steamboat, sowed under and sunk.

The claimants deny any fault on their part, and allege that the barge was towed at the risk of her owners, and the steamboat is not liable for the accident in this case.

For libelant, Mr. Betts; for claimants, Mr. Beckley.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—Dec. 8.

Before Mitchell, P. J., and Clerke and Roosevelt, J. J.

ASSIGNMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

C. made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, containing a provision, that after payment in full, the surplus should be returned to him. Held, valid.

Ely vs. Cook.—The object of this action is to rescind an assignment made by Mr. Cook, to Trustees and Creditors. By the instrument Mr. Cook conveyed to Messrs. Foot & Gardner all his property, real and personal, (it is not to divert and the country generally, to be applied "in proportions to the amount of debt," to receive the money, and when they are fully paid, the residue, and to pay over the surplus to the said party of the first part."—Mr. Cook—the assignor. The question in this case is, whether the latter clause, providing that the surplus should be returned to the assignor, after payment in full, will render the assignment void?

The case was tried before Judge Edwards, without a jury. He held that the assignment was not fraudulent or void, and dismissed the complaint. From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

The case was argued by Messrs. Chas. B. Smith, for the plaintiff, and by Messrs. Hoffman and Dwight, for the defendant.

ROOSEVELT, J.—The assignment was in this case a transfer of all the debtor's property, to be sold, to discharge his assignees and creditors to preference, and provided for no further gain, until and unless the creditors should be paid and satisfied." In that event, and in that event only, the assignor were to receive the surplus to Cook the debtor. If such an assignment, on its face, fraudulent? Or the mark an assignment, without a resulting trust of surplus, or said to be a transfer made for the use of the party making the same? It is admitted that without any express direction as to a surplus, if any, a trust, by operation of law, would have resulted in favor of the assignor, and that such a resulting trust would not have affected the validity of the transfer. How then can an express direction of the same provision import an act that under the law, without the words, would have resulted and existed, be adjudged fraudulent?

Such assignments, when made in good faith, are no more fraudulent for the use of the assignor than any ordinary mortgages for the use of the mortgagor. In the one case, as in the other, if there be a surplus on the sale, it goes, as it obviously ought to go, and as the instrument provides it shall go, to the party making the mortgage or assignment. There is no "use" in either case, incident to the transfer, but and a "use" for which the transfer was made. And in this lies the whole difference—a difference, not verbal or technical, but founded in common sense and the relations of debtor, (who most unfortunately for the cause of diminishing litigation, has been judged the party to be benefited by the transfer,) and creditor. Where a debtor, perfectly competent, wishes to prefer, the ordinary course of conveying a share of property, and therefore makes an assignment solely for that object, that debtor, and his creditor, by reason of the creditor's loss—such a transfer, it is obvious, although nominally "for the use of others," is really, in the usual expression, "for the use of the person making the same," and therefore fraudulent and void

NEW-YORK CITY.

FAILURE OF THE EMPIRE CITY BANK.

Burning of the New Banking House.

While the Empire City Bank was located at the corner of Broadway and Anthony-street it was reported that the Bank had suspended the redemption of their issues, but owing to good management, the "run" was quickly stopped. Shortly after, an arrangement was carried into effect, whereby the Empire City Bank was transferred to a new banking house, corner of Greenwich and Dominick-streets, that was about to be established under the name of "National Exchange." Since that period all has passed off without interruption; until late in the afternoon of Saturday, when it was announced that the Empire City Bank had failed and barred its doors.

The Bank Superintendent will at once take possession of the books and other property of the said Bank, and investigate its affairs. The result of the Empire City Bank will no doubt be redeemed in a few weeks at a hundred cents on the dollar. It is indeed a singular coincidence that in the course of a few hours after the failure was made public, the banking house should be discovered to be on fire.

PARTICULARS OF THE FIRE.

About 9½ o'clock on Saturday night the fire was discovered. A slight smoke was observed escaping through the windows of the first story in which the principal business of the Bank was transacted. In a few minutes after the alarm was given by people in the neighborhood, three engines arrived, but after some slight efforts the outside doors facing Greenwich-street were forced open. These doors being of iron, it is to be presumed, offered the greatest obstacle to an entrance, but strange to say, instead of the inner doors being immediately opened in order to afford a communication with the interior of the building, the outside doors were instantly closed by some men who crowded around them, and was repulsed others who were attempting to force an entrance. One party seemed determined that an entrance should not be effected at all events there and then, and the other party, after a momentary squabble, gave up the attempt. The end of a ladder was then placed against the front window next to Chambers-street, the glass and sash of which were easily demolished, but the "men" got little service. It was planned so obliquely, and the force applied was so slight, that since some fifty blows not the least impression was made on the iron shutters. It was quite obvious that the firemen could not enter the Bank by such means.

Two firemen next succeeded in reaching the windows of the first story, and began to wield light axes, for the purpose of making holes in the shutters. After a good deal of exertion, a small opening was effected, and the ladder being applied again, the shutters were driven in. A considerable amount of smoke issued from the opened window; but the fire was not in the front apartment. It soon appeared that whatever fire was on the premises was confined to the extreme part in Dunne-street, to which the firemen directed their attention; but, even there the fire was so inconsiderable that no blaze burst forth. The fire seemed to be confined to the cording and wood-work about the door in Dunne-street. Yet the firemen were very unsuccessful in their efforts to extinguish it speedily, for it still burned while they were arriving to bear in the iron shutters. It was nearly half an hour after the fire was discovered before any one ventured to the second story. After a good deal of work, however, an entrance was effected and the building saved—the damage which it sustained not exceeding $2,000. The basement was occupied by the Ledger Insurance Company, and was considerably injured by the water. If there had been any person residing on the premises the fire could have been extinguished without any trouble.

Since the above was written, we have received the following note from the officers of the Institution:

EMPIRE CITY BANK, Dec. 11, 1854.

The office of the Bank having been rendered uninhabitable by the fire of Saturday evening, the Directors give notice that they will procure another office for the Bank in the same neighborhood as soon as early an hour to-day as practicable, of which due notice will be given.

All the valuable books and papers of the Bank, and the entire contents of its vault are safe.

A. M. SININGER, President.
ROBERT CRAMER, Cashier.

Appointments by Mayor Wood Elect.

We understand that Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor elect, has decided to retain the services of the present Mayor's Marshal, and his Assistant, Mr. HINCHMAN. The new Mayor has also made up his mind to change the Chief Clerkship, and Alexander MINE, Esq., will receive the appointment in place of CHARLES BURDETT. It will be remembered that Mr. MINE was one of the Tammany Hall Democrats who originated the light political jeu of "Locofocos" by lighting lucifer matches when the gas was shut off by some intruder, who managed to find the metre in the "coal hole," and turned down the screw while the Tammanyites were in secret session.

Forgery of a $5,000 Draft in Wall-street.

Yesterday morning the confidential clerk of the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company, in Wall-street, named ABRAHAM ACKERMAN, and three other young men were arrested by Lieut. CARGILL of the Ninth District Police, and GILBERT F. HAYES, of the Independent Police. The parties were brought before Judge STUART, at the Second District Police Court, where they stand charged with being concerned together in forging an endorsement on a $5,000 draft, drawn by the Preble County Branch Bank, Ohio. It seems the draft was paid the moment it was first presented, and after being concealed for several days by ACKERMAN, without spot or blemish, it fell into the hands of one FREDERICK MEEKS, who walked into the office of the above Insurance Company and presented the draft for payment the second time. The Cashier immediately honored he demand, and gave Meeks a check of deposit on the Ocean Bank for the $5,000, which amount was paid over on presentation of the paper. Two other persons named JOHN H. FLAGLER and PETER CHARLES were accomplices of ACKERMAN and MEEKS, and have also been arrested. The prisoners were all locked up by Judge STUART, to await a further binding in the matter at an early day this week.

Robbery in Hester-street.

On Saturday, an old blender, calling himself THOMAS BARWOOD, was arrested by officers MOORE and UNDERHILL, of Sergeant FLEET's squad, Second District Police Court. The charge upon which the arrest was made is as follows: Mr. THEODOR W. TROBLEY was sitting at THOMAS FAULKNER's, porter-house, in Hester-street, with some friends, and had hung his coat on Barwood, who happened to be present, seeing they were all intoxicated, with their conversation, wrenching his arm, "lifted" the coat and made tracks. Mr. TROBLEY discovering his loss, followed the man and had him arrested in Bayard-st. The coat contained a pocket-book with two promissory notes for $300 each; two memorandums, worth $4,000, and other papers of no value, given at Jefferson Market, and the notes were lost. BARWOOD made a full confession, and refused to go on board the Sea-Bird; he was found to do so by the officers. On searching his lodgings at Rebecca's, a large quantity of stolen goods were found. Persons having lost such articles are requested to attend at the Jefferson Market Police, where BARWOOD was committed by Justice CLARK.

Charge of Arson.

Mr. HERMAN, dealer in fancy goods, No. 192 William-street, who was charged with firing his premises at the above place on the morning of the 1st inst., was discharged by Justice BOGART yesterday, the evidence produced against him being sufficient to warrant the being held for further examination.

Business Court—George H. Pierson vs. Abraham Hatfield and James F. Morrison.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

DEAR SIR: Having conducted the defence in this action to the Attorney for the late firm of WALMSLEY, HARDY & Co., the real defendants therein, and observing a disposition on the part of some persons to falsify certain facts in regard thereto, and to attribute to Mr. BEARING certain motives not chargeable to him, I wish to state through your paper that said action was brought on a promissory note made by said firm, and endorsed HATFIELD & BEARING, as an accommodation endorsement for said makers; that the makers notified the said endorsers not to pay the note on the ground that the same was usurious and void; that the defence interposed was put in not by the endorsers, but by the makers, by whom my associate and myself were employed, and for whom we defended; that Mr. BEARING had nothing to do with said defence, and was in Court only as witness for the plaintiff, by whom he had been subpœnaed, and as I think, merely for the purpose of securing his attendance, and thereby give color to the false report circulated, that he was defending.

The Official State Canvass.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

The Board of State Canvassers have closed their labors—Mayor PARMELEE and Recorder YOUNG, of this city, acting with Messrs. The Board organized Thursday evening, commenced work Friday morning, and continued their labors, uninterruptedly, until the equal footings were completed. They reassembled this morning to review their footings, and terminated their labors before 2 o'clock. The Tribune will see from this that it had no ground for its charge of tardiness.
